Inwood: A confluence of diversity in both geography and ethnicity, Inwood is a unique neighborhood offering the serenity of green spaces and the babble of lively streets. While the east of Broadway is dominated by Hispanic majority, the west boasts of a truly diverse population including Italian, African, Irish, Greek and East European working class families. Located between the Harlem River and the Hudson, stretching north of Dyckman to Fort Tryon, Inwood is also home to The Cloisters, the Met Museum's Medieval collection. The Inwood Hill Park, located at the northernmost tip of this neighborhood, is much cherished for its 200 acres of forestland. Isham park and Columbia University's athletic fields also add to open spaces. The 7-lane Henry Hudson Bridge connects the area to The Bronx.
